Course Description: Research into Practice is designed to provide graduate students with an introduction to applying their own research into practical and intentional ways. This course will provide opportunities for students to select avenues for presenting their thesis research study in ways that are meaningful, purposeful, and unique to their situation—including, but not limited to, submitting a proposal to a local/state/national professional conference, applying for a grant, creating a PD that they would deliver to a local school district or non-profit, etc. Students in this course will explore the role of scholarly researcher as well as being public intellectual and how their research study can benefit local schools and community.

Prerequisite: Acceptance into Texas A&M University – San Antonio Graduate School.

Student Learning Outcomes:

1. Students will demonstrate an in-depth knowledge and understanding of various current issues and topics in education.
2. Students will examine their own research thesis topic and analyze the findings from that research to recommend solutions to complex issues surrounding teaching in diverse communities.
3. Students will synthesize and analyze current scholarly research in order to connect current educational research to educational systems.
4. Students will examine various ways to present their research and demonstrate being a public intellectual.
5. Students will reflect on their graduate school journey and how their graduate work will impact their professional careers.
